subject under investigation) its full meaning and effect, in order to carry out the intention of the framers of the instrument. It has been argued, and with much force that this clause applied salely to the judges first elected under this Constitution. I think this is too narrow a view of the question. If that had been the design it would more properly be affixed to the sche dule, and not have had a permanent place in the Constitution. Of course

ALL CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS must be regarded as permanent in their character upon general principles.

And I think it cannot be maintained, either from the grammatical construction of the language or the plain meaning of the words in the connection in which they are used, that it was the intention to limit this provision so as to apply it alone to the the same opinion still, although I have it judges first elected after the adoption of the second-handed, but from authority upon P judges first elected after the adoption of the Constitution.

I think, on the contrary, it was designed to meet contingencles which might arise, and of which this case is a striking illustra-

It might often happen that from some unforescen cause or accident the Legislature could not, from mere physical impossibility, lect all the county judges before the Is lay of January, there being about eighty in all. And this manifest difficulty would often arise, that while their terms of office all expired on the 1st day of January each than the term fixed by the Constitution. I think it is plain that Judge Minor could only hold until his successor qualified, and not until the regular term of office of such successor commenced, which was postponed ow the accidental circumstance that he was elected after the first day of January instead of before that day. Waddill was certainly Minor's successor.

for he had been appointed by the Legislature, which was by the Constitution invested with the power of appointment. has received his commission under this apthe express terms of the 25th section Minor could only hold until his successor was qualified, and not ofterwards. And Waddill, under the last clause of the 22d section, must discharge the duties of his office who were to act as such on and after the until his term begins, and then enter upon it for the period of six years from the 1st day of January, 1881.
